At the close of the address graduation diplomas, that these young people have so justly earned by their efforts, will be presented. This will close their studies in Grayling. With a good education, such as they have received in the Grayling schools, they should be eminently fitted for higher studies or for entering into useful occupations that should gain for them a good competence and fit them for useful and honored citizens.

Before closing we wish to emphasize that there is a further duty that the public owes these young graduates, and that is that everyone should make every effort to be present at these closing exercises of the school. This is our institution, built and operated at the expense of our people and the event of graduation should be as much a part of our lives as it is a part of the lives of the graduates. We should with pleasure set aside three dates—Sunday night baccalaureate, Wednesday night class day and Thursday night commencement, and when the times come be at the respective places, in honor to our class of 1922, to our school faculty, and to our schools generally.

AN EXPLOSION OF PEDIGREE TRUTH.

(Notes of the Grayling Schools)

We tried to think of something to say something that would strike your fancy; but somehow words falter and fail us. So we'll try and say "goodbye" without any fuss.

GRADE NOTES.

The third, fourth and fifth grades are planning on having a picnic very soon at Leece's Grove.

Amelia Bondy and Netra McDougal have left school.

Paul Ostrander has returned to school after a long period of absence.

The sixth grade had a play for Decoration Day. It was Lincoln, Deputy Surveyor. There were four boys who acted out the play.

Mr. Perry, father of Kathleen Perry, former principal of the High School, was a visitor at school last week. The members of the Algebra class will have a picnic Wednesday afternoon.

If the Junior boys do not pay their class dues, there will be no Junior Senior party this year.

The Junior High school had their program last Friday, that being the last program for this year. It was a very good one.

Rev. Doty spoke to the school Friday on the subject "Vibrations." It was a very inspiring, especially so to the seniors. It was certainly enjoyed by all who heard it.

Clarence Ingalls, Clarence Sherman and Tracy Heath have left school. Why quit now boys?

The Commencement exercises will be held in the School Auditorium Wednesday night.

nesday and Thursday, June 14 and 15. Professor Woody of Ann Arbor will give the lecture. The Baccalaureate will be held Sunday June 11 by Rev. Doty at the Methodist Episcopal Church. Everyone is asked to attend. Examinations begin next Monday and continue through Tuesday and Wednesday a. m. For those who don't have to take them there is little worry, but for some—Oh!?!?!

The pupils of the Eighth grade who are to receive diplomas will receive them this week Friday. There were fifty out of seventy-five who will receive diplomas.

The person who removed the flowers from the school lawn, has very little respect for the labor of the people trying to make the school grounds one of the beauty spots of the town.

Tit-Bits.

Miss Fuller in Gen. Science class: "What relation is there between Cuba and the United States?"
Bright pupil: "Second cousin."

Miss Hertzler after explaining that the comma was used between words closely related: "James, give an illustration for the use of a comma."
James Miller: "Well how would it be between a cow and a horse. I guess they're closely related, they both are about the same size and each have hoofs." Well said James.

The average girl is a queer creature. She'll make fun of a young man one day and marry him the next.

Some men are like elevators—they come down in the world every time they go up.

Dentist (prodding Don's gum in search of fragments of tooth): "That's funny, I don't seem to feel it."
Don Reynolds (ironically): "You are lucky."

DeVere Cripps had been waiting about five minutes in a restaurant, and finally became impatient. Seeing one of the waiters he hollered: "Hey there!"

The waiter looked at DeVere a minute and then said: "Sorry kid, but we don't serve it here."
Too bad DeVere, too bad.

Almost any pretty girl can bring out the silliness in a man's nature.

It may be cowardly to kick a man when he is down, but it is sometimes necessary in order to get him up.

The End Furer and Ever.

P. S. We want to thank the teachers for the school notes that they contributed, and we want to especially thank Miss Bellows for the help that she gave us in this past year of T. N. T. (Goes out one—T and you have last initial of the editors.)

CAR OWNERS MUST GET REGISTRATION CARDS.

It is estimated that more than 175,000 Michigan automobile owners have so far failed to secure their certificates of registration which are demanded by law.

The law is very stringent with regard to these certificates, and Charles J. Deland, the secretary of state, declares that prosecutions will begin under this act immediately after July 1. In case of arrest, the presiding judge has no alternative but to impose a fine of not less than $25. The fine may be as high as $1,000 under the law.

In the event of the sale of a motor vehicle unaccompanied by a certificate of title, the penalty under the law may include imprisonment up to 10 years in addition to the fine.

Application blanks for certificates of registration may be obtained at the office of the county clerk.

GRAYLING TAKES TWO MORE

SATURDAY GAME ALMOST WENT TO VISITORS.

Grayling base ball team made it two straight Saturday and Sunday defeating the Saginaw Rainbows in two exciting games. Saturday's game looked like a count for the visitors up until the eighth inning, when the score stood 9 and 7 favor the Rainbows. Salisbury who was not in as good form as in the previous game he had pitched went out in the 8th inning in favor of Laurant, who with his team mates held the visitors so that they made no more runs. The final inning was our big inning. Babe Laurant came up and went out on a pop fly. W. Laurant came next and pitched a tie breaker, to the center lot and was followed by E. Johnson, who singled getting to first base. Next Salisbury took hold of the old hickory and hit one for three stations—scoring Laurant and Johnson. Morrow featured in knocking a single back of short stop Salisbury.

Following is the lineup for Saturday's game.

Sunday Game.

The game on Sunday was a much closer one than the day before. The point of scores. The visiting team made one score in the initial frame and one in the final. Laurant on the mound for the home team fooled the visitors allowing them but eight hits while the locals registered 17 hits off Cole, throwing out the visitors. Both were good games, and each one sees Grayling going a little faster. Next Saturday and Sunday they will play the Keweenaw Base Ball club of Saginaw, and snappy games are looked for, as the team comes here with the reputation of being the strongest team in the Saginaw Valley.

ROBERTS-TRUDEAU.

The marriage of Miss Clara Ann Trudeau, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Trudeau, Sr., to Mr. Lawrence Roberts Tuesday morning at St. Mary's church, was one of simplicity. The hour was seven o'clock and the ceremony was performed by Rev. A. O. Bosler. The bride chose her sister, Miss Gertrude Trudeau for her bridesmaid, and the groom was assisted by Mr. Henry Trudeau, cousin of the bride. The children's choir rendered several pretty hymns during the nuptial mass. Both the bride and her bridesmaid were becoming suits of blue tulle, with hats to match, the bride's of orchid color and the bridesmaid's of peach color. Their corsages were white and pink roses.

After the ceremony a wedding breakfast was served to the immediate members of the families of the young couple at the home of the bride's parents.

Mrs. Roberts who has been more familiarly known to her friends as "Bilby" has assisted her father in their grocery store for the past four years and her pleasing personality has won for her many friends. Mr. Roberts came to Grayling a couple of years ago from Choboygan, shortly after returning from service overseas. He is a young man of fine principles and is popular with his friends as also is Mrs. Roberts.

The young couple are enjoying a honeymoon trip to Detroit and other places and on their return will make

COUNTY NURSE DEPARTMENT.

As has been seen, by reports handed in from time to time, that a large percentage of the children in the schools of Crawford County, have defects. The parents do not seem to realize what neglect of these may mean to the children.

Eyes—Eyestrain is a cause of headaches and backwardness in school and should be relieved to save the health and sight. Most cases should be fitted with glasses.

Tonsils and adenoids—One of the causes of earache. Also cause mouth breathing, frequent colds, sore throat and backwardness in school. Are your child's second teeth coming in evenly? If not, then look for adenoids. Adenoids and diseased tonsils can be removed at any time of the year. Don't wait. Permanent defects like deafness and bad jaw formation result.

Teeth—Small cavities filled now may save the teeth for years. Roots and abscessed teeth should be removed. They give out poison, which weakens the vitality of the child. Special attention should be paid to sixth year molar—this is the first molar after baby teeth. It is liable to decay early. It is the key tooth to proper jaw formation.

10% Underweight.

The undernourished child is a ready victim for colds, diseases of childhood and especially tuberculosis. Teach the child when young to eat plain wholesome food. Cereals, vegetables and milk are the three essential articles in a child's diet. Whole wheat bread and oatmeal are best for growing children. Milk, carrots, string beans, and other vegetables contain the all important vitamins.

Program of the Underweight Child.

1. A complete physical examination by a competent physician.
2. The remedy of defects found, i. e. diseased tonsils or adenoids removed; teeth treated; eye strain relieved, etc.
3. The usual three meals a day eaten very slowly, consisting of milk, butter, bread, cereals, vegetables, fruits, some sweets and little meat.
4. Two extra lunches at 10.30 and 3.30 of milk and crackers or bread and butter. Never give sweets between meals, as they impair the appetite.
5. A rest period of one hour in the afternoon and ten hours sleep at night, all with window wide open.
6. School hours shortened or given up entirely if need be until health is gained; outside classes and clubs omitted.
7. No vigorous exercise until the weight is normal, but plenty of play time out of doors.
8. No nervous excitement, few parties or movies until weight gaining habit is established.

This program is simple, possible, and cheap. There is no magic about it, but as a wise old physician once said of the cure for tuberculosis, "It is just living as everybody should live all of the time."

Causes of undernourishment.

1. Physical defects.
2. Lack of home control.
3. Over-fatigue.
4. Insufficient food and improper food habits.
5. Faulty health habits.

HENRY AND CONSTANCE

SYNOPSIS.—Wealthy and highly placed in the Chicago business world, Benjamin Corvet is some, thing of a recluse and a mystery to his associates. After a stormy interview with his partner, Henry Spearman, Corvet seeks Constance Sherrill, daughter of his other business partner, Lawrence Sherrill, and secures from her a promise not to marry Spearman. He then disappears. Sherrill learns Corvet has written to a certain Alan Conrad, in Blue Rapids, Kansas, and exhibited strange agitation over the matter. Corvet's letter summons Conrad, a youth of unknown parentage, to Chicago. Alan arrives in Chicago. From a statement of Sherrill it seems probable Corvet is Corvet's illegitimate son. Corvet has devised his house and its contents to Alan, who takes possession. That night Alan discovers a man ransacking the desks and bureau drawers in Corvet's apartments. The appearance of Alan tremendously agitates the intruder, who appears to think him a ghost and raves of "the Miwaka." After a struggle the man escapes. Next day Alan learns from Sherrill that Corvet has decided his entire property to him. In fact, due to the discovery that he is the man whom he had fought in his house the night before.

CHAPTER VII—Continued.

"I'm afraid you've taken rather a bad time, Lawrence. I don't get to gether later this afternoon? You'll be about here this afternoon?"

"I think I can be here this afternoon," Alan said.

"Let's say two-thirty, then," Spearman turned and noted the hour almost solicitously among the scribbled appointments on his desk pad; straightening, after this act of dismissal, he walked with them to the door, his hand on Sherrill's shoulder.

"Circumstances have put us Mr. Sherrill and myself in a very difficult position, Conrad," he remarked. "We want much to be fair to all concerned."

He did not finish the sentence, but halted at the door. Sherrill went out, and Alan followed him, exasperation—half outrage, yet half admiration—at Spearman's bearing, held Alan speechless. If every movement of Spearman's great, handsome body had not recalled to him their struggle of the night before, if as Spearman's hand rested cordially on Sherrill's shoulder, Alan had not seemed to feel again that big hand at his throat, he would almost have been ready to believe that this was not the man whom he had fought. But he could not doubt that he had recognized Spearman, beyond question. And Spearman had recognized him—he was sure of that; he could not for an instant doubt it. Spearman had known it was Alan whom he had fought in Corvet's house even before Sherrill had brought them together. Was there not further proof of that in Spearman's subsequent manner toward him? For what was all this cordiality except defiance?

Power and possession, both far exceeding Alan's most extravagant dreams, were promised him by those powers which Sherrill had shown him. When he had read down the list of these properties, he had had no more feeling that such things could be his than he had had at first that Corvet's house could be his—until he had heard the intruder moving in that house. And now it was the sense that another was going to make him king of those properties that was bringing to him the realization of his new power. He "had" something on that man—on Spearman. He did not know what that thing was; no stretch of his thought, nothing that he knew about himself or others, could tell him; but, at sight of him, in the dark of Corvet's house, Spearman had cried out in horror, he had screamed at him the name of a demon, and in terror had buried his electric force in that man—on Spearman's terror had not been at Alan Conrad. It had been because Spearman had mistaken him for some one else—a ghost. But, after learning that Alan was not a ghost, Spearman's attitude had not very greatly changed; he had fought, he had been willing to kill rather than to be fought there.

Alan thought an instant; he would make sure he still "had" that something on Spearman and would learn how far it went. He took up the color and asked for Spearman.

A voice answered—"Yes."

Alan said, evenly: "I think you and I had better have a talk before we meet with Mr. Sherrill this afternoon. I am here in Mr. Corvet's office now and will be here for half an hour when I'm going out."

Spearman made no reply, but hung up the receiver. Alan sat waiting, his watch upon the desk before him—tense, expectant, with flushes of hot and cold passing over him. Ten minutes passed; then twenty. The telephone under Corvet's desk buzzed.

"Mr. Spearman says he will give you five minutes now," the switchboard girl said.

Alan breathed deep with relief; Spearman had wanted to refuse to see him—but he had not refused; he had sent for him within the time Alan had appointed and after waiting until just before it expired.

Alan put his watch back into his pocket and, crossing to the other office, found Spearman alone. There was no pretense of courtesy now to Spearman's manner; he sat motionless at his desk, his bold eyes fixed on Alan intently. Alan closed the door behind him and advanced toward the desk.

"I thought you'd better have some explanation," he said, "about our meeting last night."

"Our meeting?" Spearman repeated; his eyes had narrowed watchfully.

"You saw me last night, didn't you?" Alan asked. "You saw that you arrived home in Chicago only this morning. Of course you don't mean to stick to that story with me?"

"What are you talking about?" Spearman demanded.

"Of course, I know exactly where you were a part of last evening; and you know that I know. I only want to know what explanation you have to offer."

Spearman leaned forward. "Talk sense and talk it quick, if you have anything to say to me!"

"I haven't told Mr. Sherrill that I found you at Corvet's house last night; but I don't want you to doubt for a minute that I know you—and about your fight of Benjamin Corvet and your cry about saving the Miwaka!"

A flash of blood came to Spearman's face; Alan, in his excitement, was sure of it; but there was just that flash, no more. He turned, while Spearman sat cowering his eager and staring at him, and went out, and, partly closed the door. Then, suddenly, he reopened it, looked in, closed it sharply, and went on his way, shaking a little. For, as he looked back this second time at the dominant, determined, able man seated at his desk, what he had seen in Spearman's face was fear; fear of himself, of Alan Conrad of Blue Rapids; yet it was not fear of that sort which weakens or dismays; it was of that sort which, merely warning of danger close at hand, determines one to use every means within his power to save himself.

Alan, still trembling excitedly, crossed to Corvet's office to await Sherrill. It was not, he felt sure now, Alan Conrad that Spearman was opposing; it was not even the apparent successor to the controlling stock of Corvet, Sherrill and Spearman. That Alan resembled some one—some one whose ghost had seemed to come to Spearman and might, perhaps, have come to Corvet—was only incidental to what was going on now; for in Alan's presence, Spearman found a threat an active, present threat against himself. Alan could not imagine what the nature of that threat could be. Was it because there was something still concealed in Corvet's house which Spearman feared Alan would find? Or was it connected only with that some one whom Alan resembled?

Constance Sherrill's most active thought that day was about Henry Spearman; for she had a hunch—on which she was not at all sure—of the fact that the two young people, opportunities for dining together without furnishing reason for even innocently connecting their names too intimately, if a girl is not seen there with the same man too often. There is something essentially casual and unpremeditated about it—although the man and the girl, both sleeping and both hungry, had happened to meet and go to lunch together. As Constance recently had been closer to Henry Spearman than her thought, and particularly since she had been seriously considering marrying him, she had chafed deliberately at this unpremeditated appearance about their meeting.

She glanced across at him, when she had settled herself, and the first little intimacies of their being together were over.

"I took a visitor down to your office this morning," she said.

"Yes," he answered.

"Constance was aware that it was only to Corvet that she had taken Alan Conrad down to confer with her father; since Henry was there, she knew her father would not act without his agreement, and that whatever disposition had been made regarding Alan had been made by him.

"Did you like him, Henry? I hoped you would."

He did not answer at once. The waitress brought their order, and he served her; then, as the waitress moved away, he looked across at Constance with a long scrutiny.

"You've seen a good deal of him, yesterday and today, your father tells me," he observed.

"Yes."

"It's plain, enough you like him," he remarked.

She reflected seriously. "Yes, I do; though I hadn't thought of it just now, because I was thinking most about the position he was in and about Mr. Corvet. But I do like him."

"No do," Alan said with a seeming heartiness that pleased her. "At least I should like him, Constance. I had the sort of privilege you have to think whether I liked or disliked him—I've had to consider him from another point of view—whether I could trust him or just distrust him."

"Distrust?" Constance bent toward him, impulsively, in her surprise. "Distrust him? In relation to what? Why?"

"In relation to Corvet, Sherrill and Spearman, Constance—the company that involves your interests and your father's and mine and the interests of many other people—small stockholders who have no influence in its management, and whose interests I have to look after for them."

"I don't understand, Henry."

"I've had to think of Conrad this morning in the same way as I've had to think of Ben Corvet of recent years—as a threat against the interests of those people."

Her color rose, and her pulse quickened. Henry never had talked to her, except in the merest commonplaces, about his relations with Uncle Henry; it was a matter in which, she had recognized, they had been opposed; and since the quarrel between the old friend and her, she had loved from childhood and he, who wished to become now more her friend, had now grown more violent, she had purposefully avoided mentioning Uncle Benny to Henry, and he, quite as consciously, had avoided mentioning Mr. Corvet to her.

"I've known for a good many years," Spearman went on, reluctantly, "that Ben Corvet's brain was seriously affected. He recognized that himself even earlier, and admitted it to himself when he took me off my ship to take charge of the company. I might have gone with other people then, or I could have started in as a ship owner myself; but, in view of his condition, Ben made me promises that offered me more. Afterward his malady progressed so that he couldn't know himself to be untrustworthy; his judgment was impaired, and he planned and would have tried to carry out many things that would have been disastrous for the company. I had to fight him—for the company's sake and for my own sake and that of the others, whose interests were at stake. Your father came to see that what I was doing was for the company's good and has learned to trust me. But you—you couldn't see that quite so directly, of course, and you thought I didn't like Ben, and there was some lack in me which made me fail to appreciate him."

"No, not that," Constance denied quickly. "Not that, Henry."

"What was it, then, Constance? You thought me ungrateful to him? I realize that I owed a great deal to him; but the only way I could pay that debt was to do exactly what I did—oppose him and seem to push him in place and—be an ingrate, for, because I did that, Ben's been a respected and honored man in this town all these last years, which he couldn't have remained if I'd let him have his way, or if I told others why I had to do what I did. I didn't care what others thought about me; but I did care what you thought; yet if you couldn't see what I was up against because of your affection for him, why—that was all right too."

"No, it wasn't all right," she denied almost fiercely, the flush flooding her cheeks; a throbbing was in her throat.

"You've Seen a Good Deal of Him, Yesterday and Today, Your Father Tells Me," He Observed.

which, for an instant, stopped her. She should have told him, Henry or— I should have been able to see."

"I couldn't tell you, dear," he said the last word very distinctly, but so low that she could scarcely hear. "I couldn't tell you now—if Ben hadn't gone away as he has and not speak. I couldn't tell you when you were wanted to keep your secret, and he was trying to hurt me with you."

She bent toward him, but lips parted; his now she did not speak. She knew—had truly known Henry until this moment, she felt; she had thought of him always as strong, almost brutal, fighting down fiercely, mercilessly, his opponents and welcoming contest for the joy of overwhelming others by his own decisive strength and power. And she had been almost ready to marry that man for his strength and dominance from those qualities; and now she knew that he was merciful, too—almost more than merciful—in the very context where she had thought of him as most selfish and regardless of another, she had most completely misapprehended.

"I ought to have seen," she rebuked herself to him. "Surely, I should have seen that it was."

"How could you see?" he defended her. "He never showed to you the side he showed to me—and in these last years, anyway—never to me the side he showed to you. But after what has happened this week, can you understand now, and you can see why I have to distrust the young fellow who's come to claim Ben Corvet's place."

"Claim?" Constance repeated. "Why, Henry, I did not know he claimed anything; he didn't even know when he came here—"

"He seems, like Ben Corvet," Henry said slowly, "to have the characteristic of showing one side to you, another to me, Constance. With you, of course, he claimed nothing; but at the moment—"

Your father showed him this morning the instruments of transfer that Ben seems to have left conveying to him all Ben had—his other properties and his interest in Corvet, Sherrill and Spearman. I very naturally objected to the execution of those transfers, without considerable examination, in view of Corvet's mental condition and of the fact that they put the controlling stock of Corvet, Sherrill and Spearman in the hands of a youth to one ever had heard of—and one who, by his own story, never had seen a ship until yesterday. And when I didn't dismiss my business with a dozen men this morning to take him into the company, he claimed occasion to see me alone to threaten me."

"Threaten you, Henry? How? With what?"

"I couldn't quite make out myself, but that was his tone; he demanded an explanation, of exactly what, he didn't make clear. He has been given by Ben, apparently, the technical control of Corvet, Sherrill and Spearman. His idea, if I oppose him, evidently is to turn me out and take the management himself."

Constance leaned back, confused. "He—Alan Conrad?" she questioned. "He can't have done that, Henry! Oh, he can't have meant that!"

"Maybe he didn't," I said I couldn't make out what he did mean," Spearman said. "Things have come upon him with rather a rush, of course; and you couldn't expect a country boy to get so many things straight. He's excited, I suppose, only in the way one might expect a boy to act who had been brought up in poverty on a Kansas ranch and was suddenly handed the possible possession of a good many millions of dollars. He's probably believed that he's only lost his head. I haven't had opportunities to tell you further these things yet; but I wanted you to understand why Conrad will hardly consider me a friend."

"I'll understand you now, Henry," she promised.

CHAPTER VIII.

Violence.

At half-past three, Alan left the office. Sherrill had told him an hour earlier that Spearman had telephoned he would not be able to get back for a conference that afternoon; and Alan was certain now that in Spearman's absence Sherrill would do nothing further with respect to his affairs.

Was there no one whom Alan could tell of his encounter with Spearman in Corvet's house, with probability of receiving belief? Alan had not been thinking directly of Constance Sherrill, as he walked swiftly north to the river; but she was, in a way, present in all his thoughts. As he approached the Sherrill house, he saw standing at the curb an open roadster with a liveried chauffeur; he had seen that roadster, he recognized with a little start, in front of the office building that morning when Constance had taken him downtown. He turned into the walk and rang the bell.

The servant who opened the door knew him and seemed to accept his right of entry to the house; for he drew back for Alan to enter. Alan went into the hall and waited for the servant to follow. "Is Miss Sherrill in?" he asked.

"I'll see, sir," the man disappeared. Alan waiting did not hear Constance's voice in reply to the announcement of the servant, but Spearman's voice came to him as he entered the hall and seemed to accept his right of entry to the house; for he drew back for Alan to enter. Alan went into the hall and waited for the servant to follow. "Is Miss Sherrill in?" he asked.

seen that Spearman, after announcing himself as unable to get back to the office, was with Constance."

He went swiftly around the block to his own house and let himself in at the front door with his key. The house was warm; a shaded lamp on the table in the larger library was lighted, a fire was burning in the open grate, and the rooms had been swept and dusted. The Indian came into the hall to take his coat and hat.

"Dinner is at seven," Wassaman announced. "You want some change about that?"

"No; seven is all right."

Alan went upstairs to the room next to Corvet's which he had appropriated for his own use the night before, and found it now prepared for his occupancy. When he came down again to the first floor, Wassaman was nowhere about, but he heard sounds in the service rooms on the basement floor. He went part way down the service stairs and saw the Indian in the kitchen, preparing dinner. Wassaman had not heard his approach, and Alan stood an instant watching the Indian's tall, thin figure and the quick movements of his disproportionately small, well-shaped hands, almost like a woman's; then he scouted his foot upon the stair, and Wassaman turned swiftly about.

"Anybody been here today, Judah?" Alan asked.

"No, Alan. I called tradesmen; they came. There were young men from the newspapers."

"What did you tell them?"

"Nothing."

"Why not?"

"Henry telephoned I was to tell them nothing."

"You mean Henry Spearman?"

"Yes."

"Do you take orders from him, Judah?"

"I took that order, Alan."

Alan hesitated. "You've been here in the house all day?"

"Yes, Alan."

Alan went back to the first floor and into the smaller library. The room was dark with the early winter dusk, and he switched on the light; then he knelt and pulled out one of the drawers. He had seen Spearman searching through the night before, and carefully examined the papers in it one by one. But found them only ordinary papers. He pulled the drawer completely out and sounded the wall behind it and the partitions on both sides but they appeared solid. He put the drawer back in and went on to examine the next one, and, after that, the others. The clocks in the house had been wound, for presently the clock in the library struck six, and another in the hall chimed slowly. An hour later, when the clocks chimed again, Alan looked up and saw Wassaman's small black eyes, deep set in their large eye sockets, fixed on him intently through the door. How long the Indian had been there, Alan could not guess; he had not heard his step.

"What are you looking for, Alan?" the Indian asked.

Alan reflected a moment. "Mr. Sherrill thought that Mr. Corvet might have left a record of some sort here for me, Judah. Do you know of anything like that?"

"No. That is what you are looking for?"

"Yes. Do you know of any place where Mr. Corvet would have been likely to put away anything like that?"

"Then put papers in all those drawers; he put them upstairs, too—where you have seen."

"Where else, Judah?"

"If he put things anywhere else, Alan, I have not seen. Dinner is served, Alan."

Alan went to the lavatory on the first floor and washed the dust from his hands and face; then he went into the dining room. Wassaman, having served the dinner, took his place behind Alan's chair, ready to place him what he needed; but the Indian's silent, watchful presence there behind him where he could not see his face, disturbed Alan, and he twisted himself about to look at him.

"Would you mind, Judah," he inquired, "if I asked you to stand over there instead of where you are?"

"The Indian, without answering, moved around to the other side of the table, where he stood facing Alan.

"They say that the Drum beat wrong when the Miwaka went down."

Tribute to Poetry.

Poetry is simply the most delightful and perfect form of utterance that human words can reach. Its rhythm and measure, elevated to a regularity, certainty, and force very different from that of the rhythm and measure which can pervade prose, are a part of its perfection. The more of genius that emotion has for high poetry, the more will the rhythm and measure which its poetical utterance adopts be distinguished by adequacy and beauty.—Matthew Arnold.

Wonder at Fair-Haired Woman.

While visitors from the West are no longer looked on with amazement and awe by the Japanese, there is one accidental type that never fails to excite interest, and that is the fair-haired woman. Not long since, a young golden-haired Scotch girl was almost responsible for a riot in the streets of Tokyo, so eager were the populace to catch a glimpse of her.

NATURALLY OBJECT OF ENVY

After All, What Is Power and Wealth Compared With Quality That Vincent Possessed?

Vincent wanted fame more than anything else when he was a young man, and he bent all his energies to attaining it; but though it came to many of his friends it passed him by.

Later, he thought that, after all, he would rather have money, for money could buy almost anything, but every venture that promised success turned out to be a failure. He became somewhat bitter. He seemed to come of himself to others.

He had many friends who held corporations, titles, and in some cases, seemed to come of himself to others. He looked on it in envy; for though he tried with every power within him, he could not make others follow, and his friends seemed to do it easily and naturally.

He hated women. But they followed him around. Everywhere he went some woman was sure to dog his footsteps. And all the other men who were other things in life, looked on in envy at the ease with which he won them. Katherine Negley in Judge.

Explanatory.

"A man in your lofty position is expected to set an example for others."

"I do," replied Senator Sorghum; "the amount of compensation allowed by the government compels me to set a fine example of personal economy."

Limited Audience.

"I'll tell the world—"

"That's a poor expression. You'll never have much of an audience."

Garden Is Back Number.

Commuters who do business in the metropolitan district may be taking just as good care of their gardens this year as ever, but one would never guess it from the daily conversation of these country dwellers on the suburban trains.

It used to be: "Yes, I put in my mixed king asters and I got my radishes down and my celery started. Got to remember to buy some new garden hose tonight—looks like a dry spell."

Now it is: "Sure, I can get WJZ, but I'm not able to get the Detroit broadcasting—perhaps if I had a two-step receiving set—"

"You don't want to overload your bulbs on that set—"

"A one-strand aerial's just as good as a two-strand for your set, but you ought to make it at least 100 feet long."—Chicago Journal.

Established a Record.

An Irishman, who was to return to his native land by a certain steamer, arrived on the pier just as the vessel was starting—in fact, she was already on the move.

Taking a flying leap, he covered the intervening space of six or eight feet at a bound, but tripped on nothing and hit his head, temporarily stunning himself.

When he recovered his senses, the vessel was a couple of hundred yards out at sea.

"Be jabbers!" he exclaimed, not realizing what had happened, "what a jump."

In Debt.

Wife—"Every husband owes a great deal to his wife." Husband—"And generally still more to her dress-maker."

D. 1920 at one o'clock p. m.

And whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of three hundred ninety one and 84-100 ($391.84) dollars of principal and interest, and the further sum of thirty ($30.00) dollars as an attorney fee stipulated for in said mortgage, and which is the whole amount claimed to be unpaid on said mortgage and no suit or proceeding having been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt now remaining secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Fordson

THE UNIVERSAL TRACTOR

Henry Ford

HENRY FORD was 35 years getting ready for the new price on the Fordson. He started as a farm boy, planning to get rid of the drudgery, long hours and low money return that has always faced the farmer.

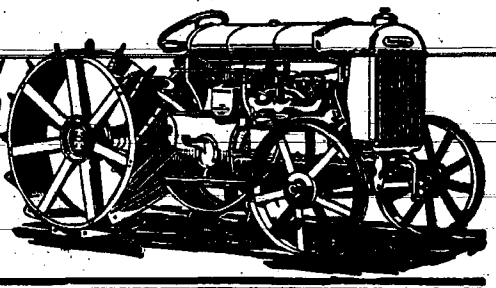

He wanted to furnish you with a tractor that would not only do your work better and faster, but at lower costs—and the 170,000 Fordsons now in use have proved that he has accomplished these things.

What you get in the Fordson for $395 f. o. b. Detroit is the greatest farm power unit ever offered.

Let us show you how a Fordson will cut farm costs, increase your bank account and take the drudgery out of farm work. Write, phone or call.

Detour!!

Detour!! Wherever he drives now the farmer, as well as, others, sees the signs.
He who heads those well-meant signs, placed with good intent, does well. He saves himself a lot of trouble and is guided to a better way.
He who does not heed them, runs into trouble, and has only himself to blame.

Detour!! People of all the occupations that are getting satisfactory results are making detours, or have made them.
If managers of street car lines had not heeded the sign "Detour," cars on those lines would still be drawn by horses.

If doctors had not detoured and adopted ether, they would still be cutting off legs and arms while the patient screamed.

If dentists had blindly plumed on like us farmers, though, confronted with the sign "Detour," our teeth would not be drawn with so little pain. If everybody were so slow to detour, to turn out, to change, to pick up a good thing, a better way, towns would be in darkness and we would sit in our gloomy homes squinting by the wretched light of a tallow dip.

Detour!! If the leaders had not detoured, sought better ways, the world would sink hopeless and helpless before the ravages of tuberculosis, smallpox, pneumonia, yellow fever and diphtheria.

Brother farmer, you and I are queer people. We don't detour very much in our business.

We expect other occupations to find the best ways to do their work. We give us electric light in our trains instead of lamps; invent telephones; invent cement and the paper packing box when lumber became scarce; improve our self-binders, plows and phonographs, and to give us moving pictures; but, we, because we are farmers, try to fool ourselves into believing that we are a privileged class, a class apart, different, a kind of people who do not need to detour, to change, to seek better ways. Can you beat it!!!

We take into our lives rural delivery, parcels post, telephones, autos and better roads to run them on; but, in the actual conduct of our very own work, we do not very often detour, seek a better way, or follow a better way though we meet some who have traveled better ways and takes the trouble to tell us which way to go.

We go on, year after year, with-out a thought corn stalks waste more than half their food value by standing out.

We don't hill-select our seed corn, nor intelligently cure it, nor test before planting.

We don't hill-select seed potatoes, nor spray for blight.

Because we have once planted them, without selecting or treating we think we always can.
It may be a little trouble to detour;

but it may be more profitable, and save trouble.

If timothy and clover fail we think we must submit to empty hay mows.

Detour!!!
If oats are covered with smut, don't think it must be so. Detour!!!
If the farm is running out, detour!

Use Green Manure.

If we have the idea that alfalfa can not grow here and cut two luxuriant crops a year, read the sign board "Detour."

If we are sick of waiting a year for a chance to sell beef animals and then get an offer of five cents, four cents, three cents, a cent and a half a pound, all of which were offered here, detour, and keep dairy cows, good ones and put a can of cream on the train every few days, forget it, and receive a check by mail in a few days.

If we think that, just because we are farming, we must grow potatoes, and lift and lug on them, and take the fertility away from the farm, and make money on them often enough to bait us on to try it again until we lose it, let us detour, brother farmer, and raise ensilage corn on the same ground, feed it to dairy cattle, get frequent cream checks, and have a mountain of manure to put back on the land. Detour!!!

If we think it is money saved to keep scrub cattle, and to breed to scrub wayside bulls because we save two dollars, for mercy make man, let us detour.

If we think that pile of stable manure must necessarily lie there and heat and leach a year, detour!

If we think that thoughtful reading of books and bulletins on farm management is silly, and that care ful perusal of two or three high class weekly farm papers is waste time; detour brother, detour quick.

THAT DULL ACHING.

Don't worry and complain about a bad back. Get rid of it! For weak kidneys, lame and aching backs, your neighbors recommend Don's Kidney Pills. Ask your neighbor!

Mrs. Edna C. King, Grayling, says: "Some time ago my back caused me considerable trouble. It was lame and ached through the small part, and a dull ache seemed to settle there. When I had any lifting or stooping or do I always got a pain in my back and was often tired and weak and all worn out. I began to worry and be- came depressed and irritable. I was blinded by specks coming before my eyes and headaches came on suddenly. My kidneys had me in a run down condition and I felt wretched all over. I was advised to try Don's Kidney Pills so I got some at Olson's Drug Store and they cured me."

Free 60c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Don's Kidney Pills—the name that Mrs. King had. Foster-Milburn Co., Mfrs., Buffalo, N. Y.

THE HOME OF THE SOUL.

In olden times, it was believed that the seat of the soul was the stomach, most likely for the reason that a man is never so completely used up as when his stomach is out of order. For the cure of ordinary stomach troubles, there is nothing quite so prompt and satisfactory as Chamberlain's Tablets. They strengthen the stomach and enable it to perform its functions naturally. Give them a trial. They only cost a quarter.

WHY SUFFER FROM RHEUMATISM.

Do you know that nine out of every ten cases of rheumatism are simply rheumatism of the muscles or chronic rheumatism, neither of which require any internal treatment? The pain may be relieved by applying Chamberlain's Liniment, which makes sleep and rest possible, and that certainly means a great deal to any one afflicted with rheumatism.
